++ Valid for broadcast between 0600 and 1800

Headline:
Turning more unsettled during Wednesday, particularly in the north.

Today:
Bright start for south and east areas but clouding over from the west - mostly dry here. Rain soon arriving into Northern Ireland and pushing east or north east. Freezing rain and snow possible for parts of Scotland later. Cold.

Tonight:
Rain at times for many places. This most persistent over northern Scotland with some snow over high ground and risk of freezing rain at first. Temperatures mostly rising overnight.

Thursday:
Brighter for a time in south otherwise rain at times for most. Heavier rain for a time in northwest and turning back to snow over the Highlands. Milder for most.

Outlook for Friday to Sunday:
Unsettled throughout; cloudy with occasional rain, generally mild. Remaining wet and windy for most into Christmas Day, with some hill snow, gradually turning brighter, but colder from the north later.
